The Whig State Convention. The Holly Springs Times thus vividly draws the distinction between the two party Conventions of the State, in proclaiming their principles to the poeple. The resolutions passed at the Whig Convention, it says, demonstrated that the true Union spirit pervaded its proceedings. "Its members came up with that manly independence and recorded their "deep and lasting obligations to those noble Statesman." without distinction of old party divisions, "who so gallantly stood by the Compromise of 1850, and who advocated acquiescence in it as final settlement of great sectional controversies." Whilst they condemn. too, the marked favor bestowed by Gen. Pierce upon the Free-Soil and Secession wings of Democracy, the esolutions recognize and sanction 'the professions of the Inaugural Address" respecting the Adjustment measures. This is precisely the reverse of what the late Democrato State-rights Convention did. That body endorsed the appointments, but rejected the Compromise sentiments of the President. It was satisfied with distribution of "the spoils" by the Executive, though some of the rankest Free-soilers in the land, whom the Southern-rights leaders took such special pains to denounced before the people in 1851, came in for a share in preference to Southern Union Democrats; but the convention could not stand the principles of Mr. action of the two bodies in this particular, Natchez Courier.
